

THE WASHINGTON POST

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1994

■ Kentucky Gov. Brereton C. Jones (D) formed a task force to study whether hemp, which yields a fiber used to make cordage and the narcotic hashish, would be a viable crop for a state where tobacco has long been king. Jones said he opposed legalization of marijuana and that the state would continue its drive to eradicate hemp plants, remnants of Kentucky's role as a major producer during World War II.

From news services

TIMN 327186